What Can I Expect in a QRASM Session?

During a QRASM session, your practitioner will test key organ/gland reflex points on the surface of your body to determine their status in order to make specific recommendations for you, including customized nutritional supplements. During the session, you may remain fully clothed while you are comfortably standing or seated.

To test you, your practitioner will ask you to create an "O-Ring" position with the fingers on one hand. With your other hand, your practitioner will ask you to place your fingers directly on key organ and gland control points of your body. Next, your practitioner will test each of these points using classic QRASM O-Ring testing methods. This technique is simple, painless, easy to perform and requires no special effort on your part. In fact, it is a pleasure to receive a QRASM exam!

Once your practitioner has determined which control points need help, they will then test nutrients or formulas to find the "exact" match – the one that makes a point that tested "off" to test "on" again. It is truly body biocommunication at its best. In the hands of a skilled QRASM practitioner, you may find that you receive many new insights into how your body works as it communicates its needs and preferences through the language of QRASM.
